Our Trip from Russia to America

by Isaac Leppke

Father Henry Leppke and family lived in Lower Chortitz in 1860, then moved to the Colony Gerhardstal, in the region of Schoeneglasz. When the Privilegium in Russia (giving the Mennonites 100 years of exemption from military service) came to an end there was a stir to emigrate. Our father was also concerned how he might emigrate with a large family and no money.

1873 brought a good harvest and the prices were good. Father was ready immediately to move out. Also Grandfather Benjamin Nikkel wanted to emigrate. Then investigations were made how passports could be obtained. The houses were sold and the farm machinery and household goods were sold at auction, the large trunks (chests) were packed, bread and zwieback~~h~~ toasted and packed. Also a ham was packed.

Since none of the Mennonite Brethren wanted to move to America, the parents did not want to move alone. Then father talked with Benjamin Nikkel asking him to go to the Crimea and talk to Elder Jacob Wiebe and find out when they wanted to leave and where they could meet.. Then grandfather Nikkel became discouraged. He said: "Who knows what may happen to us in America?" Father did not want to go alone and so it was postponed. The following winter was another movement on to emigrate, a number wanted to move out of the colony. Father handed his name in for a passport.

Then everything was packed again. The message came that the passport was in Neuhorst. I had to go by foot to get it, about 10 Werst. We sold a number of items by auction. The following day we left with a loaded wagon for Nikopol (50 werst). The following day we embarked on a steamer. In two days we arrived in Odessa where they took us to a hotel. The next day everything was ordered and in the evening we got on the train. There was some confusion, nobody directed us to a car. Since everyone seemed to push forward, father did the same. I pushed through the crowd and entered a car and sat down near the window. All at once father came running when he saw me, beckoned with his hand and then went back. We drove through the night and in the morning we had to change trains. Now we discovered we had been on the same train with a Neufeld family. We then decided to stay together in a car so we would not need to sit together with Russians and Jews. Towards evening we came to the Austrian border. There we had to show our passports.

After our arrival we were shown a house with a porch where we lodged over night. The next day we passed through Lemberg and Krakow and came to Breslau. There the people were surprised and said to us: "You are Russians and speak German?" The next night we went to Berlin. There came an agent named Mader to receive us. He treated us with pretzels and beer. I could hardly swallow it, it was too bitter. The agent took us through the city to another depot and on the way showed us the Kings palace, which was painted a heavenly blue. Towards evening we arrived in Hamburg where our agent Mader took us to a hotel. He said that here they served good food, but the bread was not white and the lard which was spread on it. The following afternoon all our things were loaded on a ship. This went till late in the evening. Since we had to travel second deck we bought some kitchen utensils used for eating and straw mattresses to sleep on. Towards evening we embarked and settled ourselves on the ship. In the morning when I awoke, my stomach turned inside out. Then came a man with breakfast, but no one seemed to be hungry. I looked for the sack where we had our table ware. Before I found the tableware the man has left with the breakfast. Several wanted some coffee. Then we poured some coffee into a kettle and I followed the man into the kitchen where I got some hot water. We opened our trunk and the toasted zwieback were added to this coffee for breakfast. After two nights and a day of sailing we came to Hull, England. Here we entered a train and came to Glasgow by noon. The next day we went on board the big ship Polivia. After one day of sailing we came to Ireland where more passengers joined us. The bread was good but we were not used to the ships fare. The toasted bread and zwieback helped us out. The voyage was rather quiet. After 9 days of sailing we arrived in New York. An immigration agent came and gave us a New Testament and advised us where we could buy our tickets. By evening we travelled along the Hudson River inland. In the morning we changed trains and in the evening we arrived at Niagara Falls. We travelled the entire night and the next day arrived in Detroit, Michigan, where we had to get off the train. There they offered us dinner for a certain price. We had a good meal-potatoes meat and salad. After a nights travel we arrived in Chicago on Sunday morning. This was the 4th of July 1875. Monday we came to St. Louis, Tuesday to Atchison and Wednesday noon to Leabody.

There we asked where Gnadenau was. A German man told us we should say "Road to Gnadenau" and they would point the way. I and Cornelius Nikkel went through town and into the country. After we had walked about five miles, we got hungry. We stopped by a house and asked for some bread. A woman gave us a piece which we ate, and then went to the well where we drank some water. After walking some distance we met a woman and said "Road to Gnadenau" and she pointed north. We went on and came to Sam Reemer who was hoeing his beets. We entered his yard and a dog came to meet us and he bit Cornelius leg. That was a welcome! He pointed us across the field. We went about 3/4 of a mile and met two girls hoeing in the garden. Finally we arrived at Peter Nikkels, he was in the field cutting oats. She made coffee. We satisfied our appetite and then went on to Gnadenau where we met Cornelius Ens. He hitched up and got the rest and brought them to Peter Nikkels.

Tales from the Kuban Region

A first hand report of Mennonite life in the Kuban region of Russia by Benjamin H. Nikkel (1862-1945), as told to his grandson, Raymond F. Nikkel. Edited by John P. Nikkel.

During the 1860s the Kuban territories were still wild and undeveloped. The Cossacks of the territories were now tamed to some extent and were placed at intervals along the river itself, as outposts for the Russian Government. A few Cossack villages were scattered from the Black Sea to the Caspian Sea. Because the Cossacks were not farmers, but tribes which traded amongst themselves and to some extent with the Russians for staples, their villages were squalid, dirty unorganized and had mostly men living in them. The women were mostly Concubines living first with one and then another of the men, with the exception of a horse ranch here and there, a few animals roaming near the settlements, the country was completely undeveloped. The land was covered only with native grass. A few trees were scattered throughout the country side, but most of these were along the stream which flowed out of the high lands and into the Kuban River itself. The Kuban and Terek rivers had ~~xxx~~ their headwaters in the Caucasian Mountains and flowed into the Black Sea and Caspian Sea respectively. The Kuban river with its trees and thick marshy areas was filled with weeds and other cover, making perfect hiding places for bandits waiting to raid the farms and villares. The climate is good for growing crops, the soil ideal for farming. Wildlife and fish were abundant. It was a land filled with promises for pioneer families who could withstand hardships. Mennonite families prospered in this region very well.

On Sundays and other holidays Mennonite children would go to meadows or streams to play. A plant, called licorice, would grow and the children would chew on the roots. They were always warned to stay together, for it was possible to be kidnapped, and never to go very far.

The Kuban region at this time had been gained from the war with Turkey. However, Russia did not own the land around the Caucasian Mountains until after 1850. In 1862 they were still completely wild and unconquered. They were filled with wild Bellicose and Circassian Tribes. During one of the raids made by a tribe, one little girl was kidnapped while she was playing with the other children, and taken by the chief to the headquarters in the mountains. I believe the little girl was about four or five years old. A few years later the same tribesman raided the village again, and somehow the father of the girl knew it was the same ones that had kidnapped his child. He brought out an old musket and tried to kill the chief. This was of course completely contrary to the beliefs of the Mennonite settlers, but the musket misfired. The chief did not kill the man, but he took his long black whip and whipped the man within an inch of his life. The other settlers did not take any action, but stood and watched. They probably chastized him later for trying to kill the Cossack chief. According to grandfather, he was a Cossack, and the villagers did chastize the man, because he put others in the village in danger of reprisals from the raiders. The man, who never completely recovered, was an excellent horseman. His main job in the community was the breaking and training of wild horses. The breaking and taming of horses was a source of income, and it seems there were bands of them around. Several years after the little girl had been kidnapped, the same man, the father of the child, was also kidnapped by the same Cossack chief. He was taken to the tribesman's village high in the Caucasian Mountains. There as a slave he also broke horses. Shortly after he had been kidnapped, another Circassian tribe attacked the village he had been taken to, and he had an occasion to save the chief's life. In the meantime, although the slaves were forbidden in certain parts of the village, the kidnapped man was wandering one night and passed close to a hut where he heard a young girl's voice praying the same prayer he had taught his child to pray. The prayer was in his own native German. Somehow he knew it was his own child who had been kidnapped a few years earlier. Each day while he was breaking and taming horses he would watch for this girl and finally one day he saw her. Without a doubt he knew she was his own daughter and thereafter he thought only of a way that he might escape with her. His chance came much later when he again saved the life of his chief during another raid from a hostile village tribe. This time the chief offered him (the little Mennonite girl's father) his freedom. The father would not take it, unless he could also take his daughter with him. Then he told the chief he had recaptured his daughter, whom he had discovered in the village. After much consideration, the chief finally relented and allowed her to go with him. The Cossacks led them out of the mountains and released them near their own village. The girl was in the early teens by now. For the Cossack chief to let her go was a God-given miracle, since he had raised her like his own daughter.

"I do not know who these persons were, but the story was certainly indented in grandfather's mind", explained Raymond F. Nikkel.

Raymond goes on to describe his grandfather's life as a young teenaged lad in the Kuban. The Kuban River area (where the Mennonites had settled in the early 1860-s) was very hot and humid in the summer. However, eastward, toward the Terek river and on the steppes and prairies it got a little cooler from the breezes which blow off the Caucasian Mountains. It was extremely cold in the winter, where my grandfather lived. Grandfather told of the sleighs he rode on, and how cold it was to take care of the animals in the winter. His job was to take care of the sheep with the help of his dog, Mep. In the summer he would take them to the meadows and hills to graze, and in the winter he would feed them in the barn. At this time Benjamin H. was about 14, the age that a boy was considered to be an adult. In the winter time he also went to school with the other children.

Benjamin H. told of the fish they used to catch in the river. The Kuban river, like the Don and the Dniepr, was full of fish and they formed part of the Mennonite farmers' diet, as they did the native Russians.

In summer or fall fish were eaten fresh, but some were salted down for eating in the winter when the rivers were frozen over and no longer be fished. The varieties were numerous: herring, carp, salmon and giant sturgeon and other species. Netting the fish was the favorite way to catch them in quantity, but another way had been found to catch the huge sturgeon. Grandfather Nikkel told of placing a huge chunk of meat (on a hook) at the end of a heavy rope or line, and letting it sink to the bottom of the river. Some of these fish would weigh hundreds of pounds and (a team of horses) or a block and tackle would be used to pull them out.

It seems like with the abundance of fish and other game, (the Mennonite people) would have been exceedingly well fed. However, as I remember grandfather talking, I had the impression that it took everything they could raise, grow or fish to raise enough food for all, and to sell or barter some, in order to buy the necessary things for running a farm.

Wild game was in abundance also. Packs of wolves were a menace, and there were coyotes and different species of wild cats. Countless numbers of smaller game was around too, probably making it a young boys hunting paradise.

This concludes Benjamin H. Nikkel's Tales from the Kuban Region.

Bertha Nikkel *July 28, 1886 Yates Center, Kansas

+July 16, 1911 Corn, Okla.

A startling story is told about Bertha, and her 1st 'death' from which she recovered. One day at Yates Center in Kansas, Bertha "died" as a young girl at the home of her parents. She was bathed, dressed for burial, and ~~sk~~ laid out in the front room of the house, as was the custom in those days. After about 36 hours her sister Anna came into the room and loudly mourned ~~for~~ her sisters passing.

Suddenly Bertha's arm dropped over the side of her bed, and she opened her eyes. Miraculously Bertha returned to life. She lived on to the age of 26 years till her final death.
